Glenwood School for Boys and Girls

Glenwood School for Boys and Girls was co-founded by Robert Todd Lincoln, son of President Abraham Lincoln. Glenwood was one the first and oldest training schools for dependent children in the Illinois. Glenwood has evolved from a manual training school for dependent boys focused on farming to a comprehensive education and supportive boarding program for boys and girls focused on academic success. Glenwood's Rathje Campus is the school's second location and has been serving the communities of the Fox River Valley for 15 years.

Glenwood believes with courage, character and community, underserved children can reach their potential and become remarkable citizens. Glenwood partners with low-income, single-parent families through high quality individualized education and a nurturing boarding program to help academically capable children reach their potential and achieve futures of promise.
